A: You need to escape the period with a backslash:

import urllib2
import xml.etree.ElementTree as ET url = ""
response = urllib2.urlopen(url)
tree = ET.parse(response)
getting product info and data download request
data_list = []
for item in tree.getroot():
    name = item.find('Owner').text
    url = item.find('StoreCode').text url = url[1:10]
    data = item.find('DownloadCounts').text
    data = data.split(" ")
    data_list.append(data)
print("%s: %s, %s" % (name, url, data))
You could write this as a generator
def GetDataByName(name):
    url = f'

See Why does apt want to fetch things that are not installable? for a similar problem. The problem is that you have a couple of sources (see apt_preferences) that give priority to versions from the official repositories. If you add them to your sources.list file then you will not have these problems. I have no way of knowing whether you are building your own package with a custom build environment or whether your sources.list files is incorrect for your environment and/or build. Edit: After investigating further it seems that apt is seeing that Nginx is installed (probably by a package called nginx) and is trying to fetch a newer version than it already has using zypper.
